

Consumers need to be able to make choices and Bell South's attempt to remove broadband access from regulatory oversight will only harm our ability to choose where we get our service from as they (and sooner, rather than later, other telephone companies) will set prices high enough to effectively eliminate competition.